Syn I Schuld, Ursache. Schuld can only be employed for "cause," when the effect and motive are bad, but Ursache (cause) may be used indifferently, whether the effect and motive be good or bad

Syn II Schuldlos, Unschuldig. Schuld may be considered in two points of view. It is guilt or a fault, when it conveys the impression of a neglect of moral duty, together with its imputation and harm, when it implies an injury committed or a wrong sustained. Thus last idea prevails in unschuldig (harmless), the first in schuldlos (guiltless, faultless); children are said to be unschuldig (innocent), because they are incapable of doing anything wicked, when certain pleasures, games, sports, &c. are said to be unschuldig (innocent, innoxious), all that is meant to be conveyed is, that they are not detrimental, those are schuldlos (guiltless, innocent), which are not opposed to any moral law syn. Segnen, (Einen) einsegnen, (Einen) den Segen geben, Segnen (to bless) is principally distinguished from den Segen geben (to give the blessing or benediction) by this, that the former represents also the mere inward wish, whilst the latter expresses that wish by words or other signs. Thus the priest, at the close of divine service, gibt den Segen (gives the blessing) to his congregation; he gives also the ritual benediction at the altar, &c. Einsegnen is to consecrate, also to devote by a blessing or by invoking the grace of God (e. g. children at confirmation).

Syn. Sehen, Ansehen, Gaffen, Angaffen, Guken, Schielen, Bingen The act of directing the eyes to any object is expressed by ansehen (to look at), the ocular perception of that object by sehen (to see) He who wants to sehen (see) any thing properly, must ansehen (look at) it, and he who anseht any thing within the scope of his vision, supposing his sight to be perfect, will also sehen (see) it. Ansehen without attention is gaffen or angaffen, i. e. to gaze or stare stupidly, to gaze at. The Gaffer (gazer, starrer, gazer) has his eyes wide open without seeing distinctly, or without being exactly conscious of what he really is seeing. Angaffen differs from gaffen in implying a definite object, whilst the latter is to gaze at any thing. Sehen expresses a part of the meaning of guken, viz.: that part denoting the direction of the eyes to the object, but implies besides the inquisitive approximation of the head towards the same. It is hence "to peep, peer, look inquisitively." Schielen is to squint and blinzeln is to blink accompanied with winking, i. e. "to blink and wink."

Freundschafft. All those belong to the Etpe- chaft, who are connected or related to each other by blood in an ascending or descending line, as parents and children, their ancestors and posterity, they form, therefore, the genealogical tree. Besunder differs from Bermannt inasmuch as the former merely represents such persons as are connections by marriage, whilst Bermannt can also mean relatives or relations by birth. Hence the first is consanguinity, the second relationship, and the third affinity.

Syn. Spalten, Trennen. In the first place, one spaltet (cleaves, splits, rends asunder) only solid and tough or stiff bodies; one trennt (separates or parts) fluids, and amongst the solids also such as are plastic. The seas on our globe are rent (separated) by the main-land, but not separated; a great and continued heat on the other hand often splits (cracks or chaps) the rocks. Then again, one spaltet (splits) what was intimately connected and united; one trennt (separates) that, which, what, being intimately connected, was considered as one whole, the parts of which, after the separation, begin to exist as independent wholes.

Späh, m. (-s; pl. -) wood-cleaver.

Späh, adj. 1. chinky; having fissures; 2. that may be cleft; fig. divided, disunited.

Spähung, f. (pl. -en) fig. disunion, division, rupture; schism.

Syn. Spaltung, Trennung, Berrückung. Disagreements among the members of a society are only mere Spaltungen, (splits, divisions, differences, disunion, schism), so long as these members do not secede and set up a separate society of their own; the moment this takes place, a complete Trennung (separation) follows. Even among the very early Christians there were several Spaltungen (differences), but those Spaltungen were no Trennungen, since they still formed one congregation, one church as before, and did not give rise to a sect. When the Spaltung (breach of concord or unanimity) is accompanied with ill-will and hostile demonstrations, so as to lead to a breach of the previous good order, it is then a Berrückung (an open rupture).

Späh, f. husk (of barley, &c.) vid. Späh.

Stammesfen, n (-s; pl —) T chisel
Stammesler, m vid Stammesler.
Stammeln, v a & n. (aux haben) to stammer, stutter, hammer in speaking; to hsp; fig. to falter; pronoun, express in a faltering voice.
Syn. Stammeln, Stottern, Rallern Stottern implies an interruption or break, and has a repetition of words or syllables accompanied by a painful feeling of exertion on the part of the person so speaking. It arises either from a natural defect or from an unfortunate habit. It is, therefore, identical with our "to stutter." Stammer and stammer merely imply an imperfect utterance without the accompanying defects of stammer. The children (speak or stammer), when their tongues, as yet imperfectly trained, utter words only partially or incorrectly, stammer is, therefore, almost the same as our "to stammer." Stammer is the stronger word of the two, expressing the higher degree. Hence it is sometimes equivalent to our "to mutter," in choice or poetic language it may be rendered by "to flap."

Syn Strafe, Buße, Sühnung Buße is the indemnification, reparation, amends which a person who has done wrong or who has committed an injury has to make either by reimbursement or other mode. Buße is therefore atonement, every other suffering which he has to undergo for the crime or wrong committed is the Strafe = a penalty or punishment, when the party that inflicts the punishment has the intention of producing the reformation of the party punished, in that case the Strafe is a Sühnung or chastise-ment. Some Strafen may be Sühnungen at the same time. They are Strafen, as the deserved and proportionate consequences of a crime; they are Sühnungen as a means of improvement. The Leidsstrafe (capital punishment) can for this reason be no Sühnung, for in this life no reformation can be effected by it.

Theilen, v I a to divide, part, share, II refl 1. to split, to separate; 2 to divide itself, be divided, 3 recipr to share one with another (sich in etw ma —).

Syn. Theilen, Eintheilen, Abtheilen, Vertheilen. Theilen is generally to separate a whole into parts or divisions (so ja puce, &c.) denotes that one separates the whole into smaller parts of a definite regular number, or a thing of higher rank into parts of inferior rank. Thus may be done by the mind merely; if this separation is also made evident to the senses by outward signs, it then becomes arbitrary (to part off, to divide, &c.). Vertheilen (to part asunder, to disconnect, &c.) is separating the constituent parts of a whole in such a manner, that they exist as independent wholes for themselves.

Syn. Thier, Bieh The term Bieh is limited to domestic animals. It is, however, far more comprehensive than the English "cattle," which merely implies oxen and horses, and Seetier, Bug, Waldvieh, Seefisch, Landvieh, Waldvieh u f w The ant is considered an industrious Thier and the bee a prudent Thier. Hence the term "animal" is not the full equivalent for Thier; for although all living things are animals in contradistinction to vegetables &c, the animal cannot be used in common life for an insect, a bird, or a fish, &c, but these words must be substituted for the German Thier as the context may require

Thierisch, I adj. animal; brutish, beastly. bestial, die —e Barne, animal heart. II. adv. brutishly, beastly

Syn. Thierisch, Biehisch, Brutal Thierisch in man is every way that he has in common with other animals. This is not opposed to the prerogatives of his reasoning nature, and does not exclude them. That which is opposed to them, is thierisch. Every gratification of sensuality has something thierisch (of the animal) in it, but that influence which by its violation of nature's laws or by its extreme excess degrades man from the rank obtained by his reason, that is thierisch (brutal, bestial). Brutal is an epithet of the coarsest sensuality.

Syn. Thranen, Thranen, Thranen is, in the first place, used only in speaking of the eyes, from which drops flow. Thranen is also used of the person, who sheds the tears. Hence Thranen is an effect and expression of mental pain, whilst the Thranen of the eyes may proceed from any cause whatever, e. g. from smoke, cold, a cold &c. Hence Thranen may be given by "to cry," Thranen by "to weep"

Syn. Tilgen, Bertilgen, Berstren, Ausrotten, Beseitigen, Ausstreichen corresponds exactly to the English, to root out, extirpate, eradicate, and Bertilgen is "to annihilate." We tilgen something that is disagreeable, disadvantageous, &c. to us, e. g. weeds, vermin, debts, and do so by extirpating (destroying) the first, and figuratively speaking, the second, the last by paying it. The English for this is "to get rid of." Bertilgen always implies violent measures, it is "to exterminate." Hence we may say, Bertilgen weeds, vermin, but not debts. A person justifies merely those things, which are composed of component parts, by disturbing their state of rest, by stirring them asunder, &c. Time justifies everything, but it does not bertilgen. The use of the latter, unless it is applied to God, is always figurative or hyperbolic.

Übermuth, m. (-es) 1. superciliousness; haughtiness, arrogance, insolence, presumptuousness; 2. excessive merriment, wantonness

Syn. Übermuth, Stolz; There is a justifiable and noble Stolz (pride), as the conscious sense of possessing real merit, but there can be no justifiable or noble Übermuth. False Stolz (conceitedness) demands great respect and reverence from an exaggerated representation of one's own merits. This false pride or vanity arises from self-love, is fed by admiration and deserved respect, and becomes visible by looks and gestures. Übermuth (haughtiness) arises from the contentment of all our wishes and from success in every thing we do, so that we are seduced to form too high an opinion of our powers, privileges and claims. Stolz (presumption or arrogance) is therefore humbled by contempt, Übermuth (vain glory, &c.) by non success and misfortune

Syn. Umzingeln, Umgeben, Umzingeln. A person is umgeben (surrounded) by many others, even if the circle is not yet completely closed. When the king appears at the court he is umgeben by the court dignitaries, but not umzingelt (encircled), still less umzingelt, for they only stand behind him and on both sides. Moreover umgeben is said also of a circle, that consists of inanimate things. The sun and the moon are sometimes umgeben by a bright circle which is called a halo. But that which is umzingelt is shut in on all sides and into a perfect circle. We therefore umzingeln something, that it may have no egress, and no one to ingress to the same. Umzingeln is to close something in more narrowly, to obstruct the egress and to be able to attack it from a short distance. Umzingeln, therefore, may either have a friendly or a hostile object in view, but umzingeln (to encircle, encompass) only a hostile one.

Ungern, adv. unwillingly, with reluctance, reluctantly, with displeasure, against the grain, ich sehe —, I am sorry to find Syn. Ungern, Unwillig, Unfreudig. When a man compels himself to do any thing that is disagreeable to him, but unwilling, and ungrudging, he simply does that unwillingly, to which he has been compelled by others. We often do something friendly (spontaneously, voluntarily), that we nevertheless do ungrudging (not readily) and unwilling (unwillingly). Unwilling is distinguished from ungrudging by this, that we do ungrudging what is excessively disagreeable to us, but unwilling, what we detest, and with such a degree of annoy, une or repugnance, as to betray it by our behaviour. When any one does any thing ungrudging (not cheerfully), it is disagreeable to him, even if he does not allow it to be perceived, when he does any thing unwilling (reluctantly, with repugnance), other persons can perceive it by his looks, gestures and words.

Urtheil, n (—s; pl. —e) 1 judgment, sentence, verdict, 2 opinion, judgment, decision; etw. —über etwas fallen, to pass one's judgment or to give one's opinion upon something; meinem —nach, in my judgment. compos. —sbuch, n. the records (of a court). —sordnung, f publication of a judgment or decree; —sfähig, adj. 1 capable of judging; 2. capable of passing sentence; —sfindung, f. L. T. decision of a jury, finding of its verdict. —sgeiß, m. love of giving one's opinion, passion for judging, —sgrat, f. —s vermögen, n. faculty of judgment (as distinguished from understanding and reason), —schorfung, f. L. T. the coming to a decision, finding of a verdict. —(s)pruch, m. decree, sentence, judgment, beit —spruch vollziehen, to execute the sentence, —s tag, m. day of judgment, —steller, or —sbeisaffer, m. one who draws up or prepares a sentence, —swohl, adv. full of judgment.

Syn. Urtheil, Urtheil, Spruch, Erkenntnis, Befehl. Urtheil is distinguished from Urtheil, Spruch and Befehl by this, that it is an opinion which contains the declared will of such persons who assemble at certain periods to deliberate upon public or national affairs, and form resolutions which obtain a legal power, as soon as they are confirmed by the head of the state. Urtheil, Spruch and Befehl, on the other hand, concern private affairs, but in such a manner, that the two first are only used for the decision, in cases of law. An Urtheil (judgment) is distinguished, however, from Spruch (sentence) or a Befehl, by being the decision of a law judge or of a college endowed with judicial authority, whilst on the other hand a Spruch or an Urtheil is also the decision of an arbitrator or the verdict of a jury. An Erkenntnis (decision) is as well the Urtheil of a court of law as the Spruch of a collective body of men versed in jurisprudence. A Befehl is an answer, a decree, which superiors give to a representation or inquiry, and by which the party so inquiring or representing must regulate his conduct.

Urtheilen, v. a. & n. (aux. haben) (über etwas) 1. to pass sentence, decide; 2. to judge, to form, give one's opinion.

Syn. Urtheilen, Beurtheilen, Urtheilen. I urtheile (form a judgment), that some thing is true or false, good or bad. Urtheilen (judge, decree), however, is to urtheilen after such a manner, that the Urtheil has a decisive power. Concerning learned works every one can urtheilen (form a judgment) but no one dares urtheilen (pass sentence). He who bears urtheil (criticizes) something, affirms or denies the perfection or faults of any object.

 self (sich vor . . . from), to abscond.
Syn. Verbergen, Verhehlen, Verhehlen, Verheimlichen, Verschweigen. In the first place, a person verbergt (hides), for the sake of security, but the expression has been generally so, that that is said to be verbergen, what is not known. We say that the ways of Providence are verbergen (hidden) from the human understanding. That is verbergt, which is not intended to be seen, thus a person verbergt (hides, secretes, conceals) something under his cloak or himself behind a door, &c. A person verbergt something by preventing it from becoming known to those who have an interest in gaining a knowledge of it. A person verbergt, dissembles the truth, when he does not wish an other to know it. A person, however, verschweigt (passes over in silence, suppresses) that which he does not make known himself either by speech or writing. A Roman Catholic priest must verbergen what he hears in the confession. A person verheimlicht (conceals, keeps secret) that which it is his bounden duty to reveal.

 improved, amendable, corrigible, improvable
Verbettern, v a to better, improve, meliorate; to amend, correct, reform.
Syn. Verbettern, Bessern. When a person begins to lessen the number of faults, or something, he then bettert (bettert ameliorates or improves) it, as soon as it receives the full perfection that its nature adm is of, by having rid of those faults gradually amended, it then is verbettert, i. e. perfected or perfectioned. An author bettert (corrects) his work, in order to verbessern (improve) it or by his emendations to give it that degree of perfection which may be expected from a work of that description.

 bundenes Schiff, a low-built vessel.

ein tief verbundenes Zwischendeck, a ship which is very high between decks.

Verbinden, v. a. (aux. seyn) to connect, to join; in English "bind" as a stronger expression than "obliged"; in German verbinden is stronger than verbinden, and it is so used in the courts of law in both countries. A person having entered upon a new office, is verbunden (i. e. bound) by an oath to discharge his duties with fidelity and loyalty, to do which he was already verbunden (morally obliged) by his acceptance of the office. Verbindlichkeit is the moral necessity (obligation), Pflicht is the act which it is incumbent on a person bound by it to perform. One says therefore, to act in accordance with one's Verbindlichkeit, i. e. to fulfil one's moral obligations and to do one's Pflicht (duty).

out, seine Zeit —, to waste one's time in idleness

Verdägen, v. tr. a (einem etwas) to blame for; to misconstrue

Syn. Verdägen, Verargen, Verurtheilen. When a person thinks it wrong, injudicious or foolish on the part of another, he uses verdägen, and indeed because he considers that the other is principally injuring himself by what he is doing. But when the other person injures others by what he is doing, then the former thinks it wrong or wicked in him to do so, thus he expresses by verargen. A person verurtheilt it on the part of the buyer, when he gives more for an article, than it is worth, and on the part of the seller when he sells that article at a loss or under its fair market-value, both do not act rightly, but they only injure themselves. A person verargt it of a man otherwise estimable, if he lends money to a young spendthrift. For, by doing so, he injures another. When a person takes anything ill or amiss, v. c. when he thinks that another has acted wrong towards him, he then uses verdägen.

Syn. Verdröſſlich, Kergeſch, Gramlich, Saunlich, Murriſch. Verdröſſlich and ergetlich are diſtinguiſhed from the reſt by this, that the motives or reaſons of the former are objective, whilst thoſe of the latter are ſubjective. It is uſual, therefore, to aſſign the cauſe or motive why a perſon is verdröſſlich and ergetlich. An impatient perſon ſoon becomes verdröſſlich, if he is kept waiting too long, and a puiſſionate perſon ſoon becomes ergetlich, particularly if he thinks that it has been done on purpoſe. Moreover thoſe perſons are ſaid to be ergetlich, who are evilly vexed about trifles, inſults, for inſtance, are generally ergetlich. He that complains and laments, is gramlich; he that is mirriſch, is conſtantly finding fault, he that is ſaunlich, is inconstant, at times pleaſed, at other times diſpleaſed, without having any juſt cauſe for either, ſometimes he is gramlich and murriſch, ſometimes cheerful and contented. Children can eaſily be gramlich but not murriſch, for they can complain but not find fault. Spoiled children and women too delicately nurtured are launlich. Hence it appears that verdröſſlich means ſore, ergetlich, indignant, touchy, teſty, and alſo iras, peeviſh, gramlich is wining, fretful, launlich, capricious, ſickle, and murriſch, grumbling, scolding, snappish.

Verdröſſlichkeit, f. (pl. -en) 1. fretfulness, moroseness, peevishness, ill humour, 2 irksomeness, troublesomeness, vexatious matter

Syn. Verdrüſſ, Kergeſch. Verdrüſſ (originally the ſame as Plage) is merely the ſoreneſs or diſpleaſure itſelf, which cauſes us which any one does. Kergeſch is an anger, an irritation, which works more upon the feeling itſelf, than upon external objects. Verdrüſſ depresses, Kergeſch excites the mind. When the injuſtice committed by others affects us nearly, it makes us uſe; when we regard it as deſerving of puniſhment, we argue and act uſe. Verdrüſſ affects the mind, Kergeſch the gall. Hence it appears that Verdrüſſ is vexation, Kergeſch annoyance, irritation, vid also Mißvergnügen.

Verfäufen, v a to sell, vend, dispose of; mit Schaden —, to undersell

Syn. Verfaufen, Verhandeln, Absetzen, Verzeihen. The party with an article for a certain price is denoted by Verfaufen and Verhandeln. Verfaufen is, however, from Verfaufen in this, that it alludes to or implies a longer or shorter negotiation, in which an agreement is entered into concerning the final conditions of the contract. The act of offering on both sides is called Verfaufen. Such a Verfaufen may last some time, when both parties are very intent upon increasing their own advantage, and hence Verfaufen frequently expresses Verfaufen together with the accessory idea of self advantage, and is, therefore, used in a contemptuous sense. Absetzen, is selling the goods in so far as the stock of goods is lessened by their sale; this can take place by supplying a large order from one single person; when any one disposes of a great number of them to several buyers, and especially living remote from each other, then one says, he verzeiht them, or he carries on a large Verzeihen in this article. Hence Verfaufen is "to sell," Verzeihen "to bargain," Absetzen "to dispose of" and Verzeihen "to carry on business, to do business."

Berleſenden, v a to backbite, calumniate, slander, traduce, defame.

Syn. Berleſenden, Berunglimpfen, Beſchtern, Beſchmerzen, Spittereiſen He who perſecutes a person to others, relates to them false or unsubstantiated facts to the detriment of that person's character. He who berunglimpt him, judges his qualities or actions harshly, liberally, odiously. The highest degree of Berunglimpfen is Beſtern. For one last fact that person, on whose perfectly moral and honourable actions and in whose genuine good qualities one passes a judgment degrading in the highest degree. According to this definition, therefore, reſumendo is "to backbite or to scandalize," for scandal is either false or not proved, Berunglimpfen is "to cry down, to detract from, to asperse," and Beſtern is "to calumniate, to slander, to vilify." Now remember, and stranglempfen together constitute anſchmeiſen, in so far as the person so slanderer and berunglimpt, stood in good repute previously, and in so far as the motive for such scandal was the exciting of suspicion and distrust against him. This is therefore "to blacken, to libel, to traduce." Epithetſagen is to judge trivial, say, the most trifling faults with too much severity. It is generally for its object that of convincing others of one's own immovable conduct and of inducing others to form a high opinion of the strictness of one's own principles. This is "to carp, or cavil," or more familiarly but more correctly "to pick holes, to run down."

Syn. I. Vernehmen, Hören We hear (hören) a sound, when it generally makes an impression on our organs of hearing, but we only vernehmen it, when we distinguish it, hence vernehmen in this sense is "to hear distinctly."

Syn. II. Vernehmen, Verstehen In order to understand a speech fully, it is necessary, first, that we properly distinguish the syllables and words, of which it is composed, and secondly, that we sufficiently recognize the sense of the speech by means of those words and their context. But to do this, it is further requisite, that we be sufficiently acquainted with the language employed by the speaker, and with the subject he discourses upon. Hence it is evident that however distinctly a person may vernehmen (hear), or catch the words, which the speaker utters, he will be totally unable to verstehen (understand) him.

without previously having a knowledge of the language used, or, if in his own language, of the things forming the topic of that discourse.

Vertrauen, v I a to entrust, confide. + & provinc. to betroth; einem etwas —, to trust or intrust one with; sich einem —, to unbosom one's self to one; Maria, die vertraut war einem Manne, Mary, that was betrothed, espoused to a man; II n (aux haben) to trust, rely upon, confide in (einem or einer Sache, or auf einem or etwas).

Syn. Vertrauen, Trauen, Verlassen (ich). These words signify the expectations we form of the power and will of another. We trauen (trust) him, when we simply apprehend no evil at his hands, we vertrauen (confide in) him, when we expect good at his hands. As we can only expect good from God, and since it is utterly impossible, that he can with any thing evil, it would be too feeble an expression to say we trauen (trust) him, we must vertrauen (confide in) him. The expectation, that lies at the root of these ideas may have different degrees of certainty, — the highest of which is expressed by ich vertraue (to rely) upon some one or something.

Vertrauen, n (—s) confidence, trust; setzen — auf einen setzen, to put one's

The latter remote and venerable antiquity denoted by vor Alters (in ancient times). Vor Alters (in early ages, in olden times, in times of yore) men realised a more advanced age than now. Vor Seinen (in former times) does not designate so remote a period, nor articles it is distinguished from bormals and ehemals by its pointing out an intermediate time of several ages, whilst bormals and ehemals may signify a time past in the same generation or age. One says then In former times (vor Seinen) the nobles of Europe lived in their castles and in a constant state of feud. When bormals and ehemals are used of a period of time that is past, the former denotes a comparison with the present. This is denoted by "formerly." Früherem (ere now, before this) denotes quite an indefinite past time, which may have formed part of the life time of the speaker, or may have been before his time. Weshalb ("therefore") is in common life obsolete, it is still used in the chancery style, and is equivalent to essentially.

Syn. Borrede, Borbericht. It is expected that a Borbericht (advice to the reader) should be short, and that a Borrede (preface) should be longer. In the Borbericht, therefore, only certain circumstances are commonly mentioned, which may be useful for the reader to know. In a Borrede this is done not only more diffusely, but even the object and utility of the book, of the manner, in which the reader ought to use it, of the importance of the subject, matter, &c. are mentioned. In English an Introduction is usually somewhat longer than a Preface, Borbericht (preamble) may therefore be safely rendered by Preface and Borrede by Introduction.
